NEW MEETING PLACE

Town Council Will Hold Fort in the Beebe Block—Lots of Room for Spectators.

MANY WANT TO BE POLICE

Blairmore Will be Well Lighted—Many Street Lights Will Cause Great Effusion

The regular meeting of the Blairmore town council was held in Budd's hall on Monday evening. Mayor Lyon and all councillors were present. Minutes of preceding meeting were read and adopted.

Several communications were read. Among them being one from F. W. Doubt who asked for permission to construct a private telephone line from his livery stables to the restricted district.

Councillor Farmer thought that by granting Mr. Doubt's application the council would be advertising those undesirable places, and he would not favor such an action.

Councillor McLeod thought that Mr. Doubt's wish should be granted, and that the proposed line be also extended to the police barracks.

Farmer-McLeod that F. W. Doubt's communication be referred to Property and Works committee for report at next meeting—carried.

John Bush applied for a job to carry the refuse and garbage to the bush, or, in other words, a scavenger's job. His communication was carefully placed on file where other important documents are kept.

The following applications for the position of chief of police were read after which they were left to the tender mercy of the Police and License committee: Peter Patterson, Gilbert Roy and Joseph E. Harner, Blairmore; E. W. Parish, Coleman; Fred R. Rhodes, Macleod.

A bill of $6.95, due A. Bryden for doors, was ordered paid.

The name of Mrs. Barnes was gently mentioned a few times and the council promised to see whether or not she should be supported by the ratepayers.

Dawson and Green asked for permission to use hose and water for skating rink which they are putting up on the green near the old Conservative committee rooms.

Sinclair-Chestnut that the request of Dawson and Green be granted with the exception of the clause regarding free water—carried.

The Light committee wanted to give more light on the subject with which they are so closely connected, and recommended the installation of 9 street lights in different parts of that portion of the town south of the railroad and 6 lights along Victoria street, besides the 5 already installed along State and Stuart streets.

Sinclair-Chestnut that Light committee be instructed to bring in an estimate of the cost of the proposed lights at the next regular meeting—carried.

The following applications for

BLAIRMORE TO HAVE LARGE DEPARTMENTAL STORE—BIG INDUSTRIES WILL FOLLOW

It is currently rumored that a large departmental firm now doing an extensive business in other parts of the Crow's Nest Pass is shortly to locate in Blairmore. Representatives of the firm have already been here looking over the grounds and have taken options on several splendid sites.

Nothing definite has so far been given out to the press but it seems pretty certain that two or three lots on Victoria street will be purchased by this big firm and that the erection of a large brick and stone building thereon will immediately follow.

Blairmore is growing at such a rapid rate that it is not surprising that a concern of the nature referred to above is contemplating the establishing of a branch business here. The importance of the "Commercial Centre of The Pass" is becoming more and more a realization. Large factories are sure to follow. The remarkable opportunities for their success held out by Blairmore are quickly attracting manufacturers and wholesale houses to locate here.

A $50,000 HOTEL TO BE BUILT IN THE "HUB OF THE PASS"

It is said in well-informed circles that a large and modern hotel, to cost over $50,000, will be erected in Blairmore in the course of the next few months. This building will have only one equal in this district. Everything will be up-to-date and every modern convenience will be installed.

Just where the new hostelry will be built is not yet generally known but Dame Rumor says it will be erected some place on the new subdivision at the west end of Blairmore. We understand that plans and specifications are being prepared and as soon as a suitable site has been decided on tenders will be called for and work on the new hotel will follow almost immediately. The parties interested are out-of-town capitalists who do not wish their names to be made public just yet.

offers for secretary-treasurer and a meeting place for the council were read: W. A. Beebe offered use of room with floor space of 12 x 56 for $20 per month; H. E. Lyon offered to rent office 12 x 15, with free light and fuel, for $20 per month; T. Ede put in a tender of $35 per month for use of vacant store on Victoria street. The Property and Works committee recommended the acceptance of W. A. Beebe's tender, and motion by Farmer-McLeod the said recommendation was accepted.

Those present were informed that the next meeting would be held in Mr. Beebe's building at the corner of Victoria street and Fifth avenue.

The Water and Works committee recommended that the sum of $30,000 be paid Mr. W. J. Budd in January, 1912, for the work already done on the water system and that the balance of $8,215 be paid at the completion of whole contract.

Smith-McLeod that this council approve of the recommendation of the Water and Works committee with the exception that in addition to withholding the sum of $8,250 that an additional security in the form of bonds or other means be taken until the completion of said work—carried.

Dutil-Sinclair that the amount of money to be raised by bylaw No. 1 be changed from $50,000 to $35,000. The mover and seconder voted for the motion while councillors Farmer, Chestnut and Smith declared against it. Councillor McLeod did not vote. The motion was defeated.

Bylaws Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 were read a second time.

Mayor Lyon thought that the pool rooms should not be allowed

Liquor License Commissioners Meet

The liquor license commissioners met in Blairmore this morning (Thursday) for the purpose of considering applications for a wholesale license. There were five applications and these were from the following parties: Blairmore Liquor Co., Isaac Loughheed, R. M. Brisco, James Callan and Frayer and Murphy.

After considerable discussion on the matter the commissioners decided to not make any award at present but informed the applicants that their applications would be further considered at a meeting to be held in the city of Calgary on Friday, December 22nd.

ed to remain open any night after 12 o'clock as recommended in the License and Police committee's report.

Councillor McLeod.—I do not see any harm in allowing the pool rooms to run all night. They should be allowed to do so as well as the skating rinks and dancing halls.

Councillor Sinclair.—Dance halls should not be permitted to be kept open all night any more than the pool rooms. Councillor Chestnut.—Fernie and Cranbrook allow their pool rooms to be kept open all night. Mayor Lyon.—Their hotels were kept open some hours until quite recently.

Councillor Farmer.—I believe that pool rooms and council meetings should be closed by midnight. The discussion then ceased and the meeting adjourned immediately after voting on a motion that the debate on bylaw No. 4 be continued on next meeting night.

Mine Rescue Station Located at Blairmore

Many miners and others throughout The Pass will be pleased to learn that the provincial government is about to place a mine rescue station in Blairmore after which several more will be placed in other parts of Alberta. The stations will be fully equipped with the most modern mine rescue apparatus.

Demonstrations of the Draeger, Fleuss and the Pneumatogen mine rescue apparatus have been made before mine operators and workmen and, after several tests, it was decided that the one best suited for the purpose was the Fleuss. This same make produced highly satisfactory results from demonstrations made by the commission appointed in Great Britain, in 1910, to investigate such life preserving means.

Full equipment for the Blairmore station has been ordered and it is expected that same will be ready for operation in January, 1912.

The complete manner in which the details have been worked out for the successful installation and operation of the various stations contemplated, reflects great credit upon the provincial government who evidently are using every effort for the protection of life in case of mine accidents.

Mr. John T. Stirling, provincial inspector of mines, is the officer entrusted by the government to work out these details. With such a capable man as supervisor we have no hesitancy in saying that the work will be well done and completed to the entire satisfaction of all.

The first station will be located in Blairmore as the result of the efforts of Mr. W. Coulthard, the general manager of the West Canadian Collieries, and because of the town's central position.

Editorial Notes

Surely that English author who, when writing of November, declared there were "No shade, no shine, no fruit, no flowers, no leaves," never visited our town where the warm radiance of the sun has been felt for fully the past two weeks and where daisies and strawberries were picked in fairly large quantities a few days ago on one of the hills facing the town.

We believe every well regulated town should and will support a public library, and as a starter in this direction we suggest to our people the feasibility of such an undertaking.
 Well read minds sustain wholesome laws. True intelligence elevates the morals of a community. Good books, easy of access, rid street corners of many loafers. With plenty of interesting books at hand long winter evenings may be profitably spent, and a good public library combined with good schools, well sustained, will do much towards eradicating many prominent evils and correcting many crooked and perverse ways.

We notice that people in attending a public entertainment in the opera house or hall have no hesitancy in taking front seats, in fact, there is a general rush for them; and usually a higher price is willingly paid for the privilege. We also notice in church the custom is right the reverse, everybody crowds into the back seats and if there are any empty chairs they are always between the preacher and people, and the glad tidings of salvation lose half their charms in having to bound over empty pews to reach the audience. Why this should be the custom is not exactly clear to us, unless in the latter instance position is taken according to scripture,
 "The lowest place first in order to be invited higher."

LILLE NOTES

Mrs. Pinkney, of Blairmore, is at present visiting her sister, Mrs. F. M. Thompson.

The Church, under the able leadership of Rev. G. H. Wycherley, continues to make progress, and the interest in the services is well maintained.

Things in Lille are beginning to look like old times again. The miners who left during the strike have nearly all returned, bringing others with them. The coke ovens have been re-started, and very soon everything will be going full blast.

C. Faure has removed to Coleman, and F. M. Thompson has moved into Faure's house. F. M. Thompson has purchased the liquor store from C. Faure and will use the name as a warehouse in connection with the general store.

Blessed Are the Pace-Makers

By JOHN BARTON OXFORD

SOMEWHERE in the distance arose a hoarse cheer. The crowd in Central Square ceased its bantering chatter and picked up its ears. Two stout and pompous gentlemen, with blue and gold badges dangling from the lapels of their coats, began to push back the more venturesome of the spectators, who were straggling into the street; two more gentlemen with similar badges began to stretch the tape across the finish of the course, just opposite the Garrison statue.

And by all these signs and tokens the eager onlookers, who had been waiting in the square with more or less impatience for the last half hour, realized that the winner of the Newmouth Athletic Club's annual ten-mile road race was approaching the finish.

Necks were craned eagerly; there was much crowding and jamming against the restraining ropes. The cheering sounded nearer, and then into the far end of the square came a flash of white, a bicycle, and trailing him, a smile of confidence upon the big, homely, disgraced face, a certain confidence in the steady pad of the running feet, leaped easily a tall, thin, two-headed man, whose grin broadened as the crowd in the square greeted him with a mighty cheer.

"Who is it?" asked a hundred eager voices in chorus.

"It's Swenson," some one answered. Whereupon there arose on every side hoarse shouts of, "Good boy, Nils, old home!" "You've been a real pace-maker, and innumerable cries of, "Oh, you Nils!"

The man on the bicycle dismounted and mopped his perspiring face; the tall man in the loosely flapping running suit lifted high his hand in a salute, and the tape, and was promptly surrounded by a mob of enthusiastic admirers, who thumped him on the back and tore at the bits of his running shirt for souvenirs. Some one posted on the roof of the shoe factory, where Nils had started, was waving the white flag, and sent across from across of the horse and rider, rapping its victorious note skyward.

Then, while the overworked gentleman with the badges was still standing there for the other contestants in the big Swede's wake, Nils Swenson was hailed to the sound of cheering and the mob and borne in triumph to the near-by rooms of the Newmouth Athletic Club, just above Connolly's drug store across the square.

Here, after much difficulty on the part of his trainer—the little man who had accompanied him over the course on the bicycle—the room was cleared of all save the victor, his trainer and a few friends.

"Say, Swenson, wet time do I make, eh?" Swenson smiled and answered, "A hour, ten minutes and forty-three seconds," said the trainer, who had inquired his charge's time of the official timer.

"Gee!" exclaimed one of the enthusiastic, "that's a fine time over that course, eh, Grant?"

"Oh, pretty fair," was the trainer's non-committal remark, as he looked between Cedarville and here, all right, all right. Nils's time's the record, by most."

Swenson, perched on a table, while Grant stripped off the spiked shoes and bathed the long legs with alcohol, shook his head in deprecation.

"Ay didn't run none," he declared. "Ay didn't try to bust me up no records. Ay yoostr run to beat out them other mutts. Ay could make better time than that. Ay could do it easy as you'd say. If I run it with pace, yah, in a hour, nah," he ended with conviction.

"Gee! but you're fresh as a lark," said one of the Swede's friends, who had been allowed to remain in the clubhouse. "You ain't a bad one, winnin' this run. Bet you could go over the course again right now in almost as good time."

"Sure!" declared Swenson. "Ay tells you Ay ain't a run as fast as Ay can. Ay ain't let myself get no records. But muts in a hour easy—and some better'n that, too, Ay thinks."

"Say, I'd back you on it," declared the enthusiastic friend.

"And so I," chimed in another.

"I'd be willin' to risk my wad on it," said a third.

Grant glanced up sharply, seemed about to speak, and then evidently thought better of it, for he plied his sponge with never a word, yet with a certain covert grin on his narrow features that spoke volumes, had anyone taken the trouble to notice it.

Presently Swenson in his street clothes, limped off with his satellites to receive the trophy from the hands of the committee, and Grant himself sat quite alone in the stuffy little room.

His grin grew more pronounced, and angrily merged into a full-throated bray of laughter.

"Do it in a hour, will he? And all them fool guys will be? Back them to the limit to do it, eh? Well, well, of his showin' today! Well, well!"

Grant went down to the street, still through with crowd and horse and race. He elbowed his way through them, and headed for a certain pool-room down in the mill district.

There he found a young man, with thin young man, with fingers stained from innumerable cigarettes, who was sadly practicing darts about on one of the deserted pool tables.

"Hallo, Skiny!" Mr. Grant greeted the other.

"Hallo, Dutch!" was the reply. "I see you won't be long."

Grant merely nodded. "Say, Skiny, want to get in on the ground floor of a nice little thing?"

"Sure thing," said the other, as with his eye he measured the angles of a shot he was about to make.

"Got a good bat, wad?"

"Uh-huh!"

"Listen to me, then," said Grant.

"That dub of a Swegian has got the worst swollen head in the city. He's been taking that course in an hour or better."

And what's more, the bunch that was backin' him to win, has been taking a risk all the coin they've got that he can do it."

here. He knows how to handle yer. Don't go tryin' to do better than he was yer. He's got a bunch of money on yer, himself."

Grant got to his feet. "Come on down to the startin' point, Nils," he said, "and you, Skiny, get the horse and fetch it along. We want to get gold sharp on time."

Arrived at the starting point, where swarms of spectators in carriages and on foot and bicycle were prepared to follow the runner over the course, Swenson shed the gorgeous bath robe which he had been wearing, and, crumpled at the line, a tense, grim machine of sinews and steady nerves.

Skiny, Grant and Dutch Gansley climbed into the buggy; the clock on the village church began chiming the hour of five; the official starter cried "Ready, ready!" and Swenson crouched on his toes and finger-tips.

"Start!" said the starter. Swenson's little form became rigid.

A revolver flashed into the air; the buggy whizzed away; close to the rear wheel Swenson leaped into his long stride and smiled his confidence to the howling masses of the start. After him came the carriages and the bicycles, raising a tremendous dust.

Up the first long hill they toiled, down the other slope, across the little bridge that spanned the brook, and up another long slope.

"Hey!" Swenson hailed his paces.

"Paces!"

Grant turned grimly on the buggy seat. "You're doin' well enough," he shouted back to his charge. "Tain't time to let out yet!"

"Faster!" Swenson gurgled gleefully.

"Shut up!" Grant snapped. "I'm not gettin' any faster, but I'm not gettin' any slower either."

But a mile farther on Swenson was pleading again for more speed. "Hill!" he cried. "Hill!"

Grant's teeth shut grimly. They were approaching another long upward slope. "Fix him right here," he whispered to Grant. "I'll take him here."

MELBA'S EXPERIENCES

Melba, the eminent vocalist who will be heard in Winnipeg next autumn, has been narrating some of her experiences in Australia and New Zealand to M.A.P. and here are a few of them:

"When I arrived in Melbourne," she said, "I was simply nobbled and had, practically, to be arrested and locked up by the police. A great reception had been arranged for me, but I was not to be met. I was in a few minutes in a room of five hundred women who were to be met by the police."

"When the train ran into the station, however, the crush was so dense that I could not get anywhere near the choir, nor could the choir get near me. My party was simply swamped by the crowd, and I was in a few minutes in a room of five hundred women who were to be met by the police."

"I was all alone, but I was not alone. I was in a room of five hundred women who were to be met by the police. I was in a room of five hundred women who were to be met by the police."

"It is to the interest of the English theatre and of the British players to have a repertory theatre. It is an influence good in both directions. Even this one season at the Duke of York's theatre has brought forth many players, and if the author, Miss Baker, is really in the hotel. I was passing through the hall of the hotel when I heard him hail his wife in tones of great surprise."

"Hullo! I thought you were going to Rome, Melba, tonight."

"His wife nodded. 'So I did,' she said. 'But why are you back so soon? I was in London for a week, and I was in quantity rather than quality; for, when she explained that the concert was over, he jerked up his head in an amused sort of way.'

"Hullo! he exclaimed. 'She's had you!'"

"An exciting but unpleasant adventure befel some of what I may call my amateurish audience at Rockingham, Queensland. Some people who had been unable to get seats were waiting about the ladder leaning against the wall. With the help of this, they climbed on the roof and began to throw stones at the skylights. During the evening one of the hall-keepers found the ladder leaning against the wall, thinking that it might be in the way, he carried it off."

"The people on the roof, unwilling to escape themselves, waited until the body had left the building, and it was only when the place was deserted that they began to descend. The hall-keepers found the ladder leaning against the wall, thinking that it might be in the way, he carried it off."

DAME FASHION'S DECREES

THE latest extravagance introduced by the smart set is the use of real lace for everything and anything upper, tailing to household decoration.

The state has come from Paris, where it has reached the most luxurious limits—fair Parisians being content with nothing short of real lace of surpassingly fine and delicate workmanship to cover their boudoirs.

Some of the new lace cushions which are to be seen in several of the best-appointed London houses are veritable works of art.

The lovely specimen that decorated a deep purple settee was mounted upon a pale heliotrope satin underlapp which encased a small dove cushion. This was covered with a fine lace slip ornamented with trails of pale mauve wistaria made of satin, the foliage of which was worked in heavy loss silk.

Other similar cushions had delicate lace covers trimmed with bunches of those soft satin roses that are to be bought by the yard, and which have been so much used for millinery purposes during the spring and summer.

The advantage of this kind of trimming is that it is very effective and lends itself to being arranged in clusters, in wreaths, or in those huge nosegays fixed in one corner of the room.

Probably she feels that her figure is light and lissom enough to stand both these extremes of fashion, and no woman there exists no reason why she should refuse to sanction any mode that may choose to honor her taste.

To the instrumentality also of the middle-aged woman is due the popularity of the scarf in all its varieties.

Perhaps it was in a moment, almost of contemptuous triumph that she looked back upon the era when the scarf was a mere necessity for the covering of the neck, and she resolved that this fashion should be revived in order to show the grace and fastidiousness with which she could wear the middle-aged accessories to accentuate her present-day charm.

The evolution of the scarf of silk to its more important form of satin drapery with its lining of contrasting chiffon is entirely due to the whim of the mature woman, who has converted a dowdy fashion into a charming; becoming accessory and has thus secured for herself a place in the annals of fashion which will not be recognized by the still popular vogue of the chiffon or mousseline de soie vogue over the foundation of black or softly colored satin.

She it was who understood the merits of chiffon and its ethereal sister fabrics for softening any lines or ravages due to Time's fingers, and this fashion flamed into sudden popularity and still shows no signs of declining among women of every age.

Again, it is to the love of the middle-aged woman for effects of what may be called barbaric splendor, that the present rage for Eastern embroideries is due, for no young girl would have thought of a fashion that is at once so magnificent and so becoming, and one, too, that suits so admirably the special charms of her all-triumphant relative.

The vogue of the splendid jewels, as seen in the wearing of the rope of diamonds with its dislike pendant, is another fashion due to the woman of mature age, who grew tired, perhaps, of the single necklace of pearls and the pendant of nouveau art enamel, and banished the latter from her jewelry.

There is little likelihood of the decline of the triumph of the middle-aged woman as the arbiter of fashion. Even though the first freshness of youth, with the peart taste of complexion may no longer be hers to possess, yet her physical charms, still in their own Indian summer, are accentuated by a captivating charm and ease of manner, a fascinating and mellow wit, which the younger girl cannot hope to rival.

In these progressive days the woman who triumphs is the woman to whom life's experience has only added further graces, and whose personality is made still more attractive by the charm of dress which she herself has designed primarily to enhance her own special attributes of features or complexion.

ROYAL MONUMENTS

WHEN kings are buried all the resources of labor and art are often exhausted to provide a fit resting-place for their remains. The very name "mausoleum" is derived from the tomb of Mausolus, erected so long ago as 353 B.C. This tomb had a base 55 ft. high, a column 35 ft. high, and over that a pyramid. On the apex of the pyramid stood a colossal group of the deceased king and his wife, the statue being 24 ft. in height. In England the most famous mausoleum is, of course, the one at Frogmore, near Windsor, where rest the remains of the Prince Consort and Queen Victoria.

The Pyramids are the most famous royal monuments of any age. One of the best known of these was originally higher than St. Paul's Cathedral, and had an area about the size of Lincoln's Inn Fields. The Egyptian monarchs buried themselves during their lifetime in building these splendid mon which is the fad of the present moment. Such cushions are finished off with dainty ruffles of narrow Valenciennes lace, and they add one more extravagance to the cost of keeping one's house in up-to-date order.

Another idea is to have flower-scented cushions. These are made by sprinkling fragrant pot-pourri made from natural flowers such as roses, violets, verbena, or carnations over layers of cotton wool which line the satin covers, excellent rose pot-pourri can be made by gathering a quantity of rose petals on a sunny day and spreading them on a tray to dry. The leaves should then be sprinkled with powdered otto rose, and just before being used in the cushions they must be sprinkled with a few drops of the best attar of roses.

To match such cushions are huge lace covers worked with designs of satin flowers and heavy fringe silk enriched with glittering of gold thread and sequins, which are thrown over divans and couches, adding a very great deal to the luxury of the modern drawing room.

Table sets in fine flut and point à l'aigle lace are another extravagance of this season. There is to be had in all qualities. One set, however, destined for a house where, in happier times than the present, lavish hospitality is the rule—is so finely executed that it took two expert workers five years to make, being fashioned of tulle with a fine net that it had to be worked for the most part under a magnifying glass.

Beautiful tablecloths with inset centres of real Irish lace are no longer novelties confined to the very rich. They are to be seen on every other dinner-table of note. As often as not, these are further enriched with a deep border of insertion to match the centrepieces, the table napkins being fashioned with lace borders to match.

Fashion in its course seems to fight for the triumph of the woman who has reached her fourth decade, but who no longer submits to be known by the only opprobrious term of the middle-aged woman.

Perhaps it is fashion itself that has swept away the appearance of middle age, with its matronly dress, the shapeless velvet or silk mantle, or the early Victorian bonnet tied beneath the chin with the tight, heavy bows appertaining to the strings of great grain of satin ribbons.

All these ideas of matronly dress are now swept away, and no longer is this rampant condition fitting for the woman who, in these progressive days, is justly regarded as still youthful, even when she has passed her fortieth year.

It was, in fact, the so-called middle-aged woman, who, out of love of sheer variety, brought in for her own use what has been called the "little girl" fashions, conscious that her throat with its rounded contours was queen, and for the Claudine collar of lace or embroidered bustle, and that her own pretty foot could hold its own in the modish black patent leather.

Stocking with its piquant design of Pan seated on a leafy branch and playing his beloved pipe.

No longer is the woman of matronly status content to live in the footsteps of her matronly sisters of some thirty years ago.

She is the woman who now makes fashions, the woman for whom the latest aviation costume is created, the woman who is the smartest on the racetrack, the best dressed in the ball room, and the most picturesque at the opera.

Already she has begun to free herself from the trammels of the "shackle" skirt, a fashion invented for her own use, but of which she is tired and has now declared that, with the adoption of the tunic-skirt by the multitude, she will have no more of it.

The younger sister follows meekly in her train, obeying her behests and slavishly copying her whims, wearing the Magyar blouse that was first created by the matron woman, and then humbly adopted by the younger sister in dress of silk, or cotton, with its simple belt and its tunic-like collar of embroidery.

The power of the middle-aged woman today is seen not only in the society in which she reigns as queen, where her triumphs of social conquest over the debutante are matters of common knowledge, but also in the salons of the best-known dressmakers, who know that it is the ratchet given to their creations by their all-important client that practically decides the fate of every fashion.

It is she who has brought into vogue the ascendancy of the magnanimous hat, but, because she has made her face as well as the extraordinary popularity of the flowerpot and the mob cap top.

The study of health and hygiene has given her that love of fresh air and exercise to which, in addition to manage, she owes the freshness and purity of her complexion. The blue blouse and the picturesque veil derive their origin from her bewildering love of variety and her complex nature that expresses itself in the captivating fashion of today.

Already, as has been mentioned before, she is cutting herself adrift from the ties of the bubble skirt and is reverting to the frock that will flow softly round her feet and will be built on complete picture lines.

There are rumors, too, founded on fact, that the matron woman is bringing in again the vogue of the long Louis XVI. waistcoat of brocade worn with a period coat of satin or cloth, and strangely enough, has also expressed her intention of reinstating the once-beloved bolero coat in favor.

Green and Black Foulard worn receptacles for their dead and embalmed bodies. The longer the life of the king the greater the pyramid which was to perpetuate his memory. One hundred thousand men are said to have been employed for thirty years in the construction of one of these magnificent monuments to the great dead. Obelisks, like Cleopatra's Needle, on the Thames Embankment, were also used in Egypt to draw attention to the burial places of great potentates. The erection of complete, magnificent shrines has been by competent authorities to be the monument of ancient British kings.

In India, at Agra, is the gorgeous Taj Mahal, a mausoleum built by the Emperor Shah Jahan for himself and his favorite wife. Twenty thousand men were continuously employed on it for twenty years. It is exceedingly beautiful. There is much rich mosaic work in the interior, and the principal parts of the building are of white marble. The mausoleum itself is in the center, surrounded by a dome while at the corners are four minarets, each 133 ft. high. This is a wonderful advance on the rude cairns or heaps of stones which mark the resting-places of kings of savage far-off times. Some of our own kings have splendid chapels in Westminster Abbey, and Eastern monarchs sometimes had themselves immortalized by the erection of complete, magnificent shrines. Whatever form the monument took, it was always a place of burial, and this is not the case now. The Albert Memorial in Hyde Park, and the Queen Victoria Memorial in front of Buckingham Palace, now nearing completion, are instances in point.

PAIN: HOW CAUSED AND CURED
PAIN generally denotes a pressure of some kind upon the nerves—a pressure which is abnormal and should not be present. It may be an irritating matter, such as a splinter, a congestion of some kind, or, on the other hand, it may be the presence of a foreign body, such as a dentist's force, or an irritant poison within the system.

In all such cases there will be pain, which will be varied according to the extent and nature of the irritating and pressing matter. Usually, it will be present in a certain locality. An excess of blood, or a congestion of some kind in a certain locality, is called into being, and the result is a pain, more or less intense.

Nothing will wear out bodily vitality more quickly and surely than pain. It prevents sleep, for one thing, and in this way helps to exhaust the bodily forces. But the real reason for the extreme exhaustion following pain is not thoroughly understood.

Certain it is that it exhausts more than anything else in the same space of time. It can produce extraordinary results, too; such as turning the hair white in a short time; poisoning the secretions of the body, etc. Many persons have had their hair turned white prematurely, by long-continued pain.

Pain may be influenced—either made better or worse—in a number of ways. Some of the causes influencing pain are:

The position of the body; its motion; the presence of food; touch; pressure; changes in the weather, the temperature, etc.

If an organ is diseased in any way it usually gives pain, if it is deprived of its normal support. The organs of the body are packed in rather loosely, and they give pain if deprived of their resting place. The first thing to do, after a pain is located, is to find what position gives the greatest relief, and maintain it.

Pain generally becomes more intense upon motion. Quiet and rest are the means of relieving pain. If touch, pressure, etc., causes pain, they should, of course, be prevented, and all clothes which press upon those parts should be removed.

Food has a great influence upon pain in many cases. The chief cause of pain induced by food is that too much food has been eaten, and the food, accumulating in the body, presses upon certain nerves, and so causes the pain.

The great means of relieving pain is to restrict the food for a few days. Drink large quantities of water, eat fruit and very little else. This is the better. Pain from this cause is very frequent and will not be radically removed until the diet is made to be a more or less complete fast.

Weather changes will only occasion pain in the very sensitive, and denote that the state of the general health is low and must be attended to. The bodily vitality must be built up. No normal body would notice such slight changes, and if they are noticed it would be a sure sign that the state of the health was poor.

Finally, the greatest of all means for the alleviation of pain is by the application of wet bandages, either hot or cold, as the case may require. The feelings of the patient. If he feels that cold is refreshing, apply cold. The latter will generally be proved in all inflammatory and congested conditions.

It is a perfectly safe cure, and one that may be applied at any time—giving relief in a majority of cases, more or less instant relief.

THE INVENTION OF THE THERMOMETER

It was not until the eighteenth century that the thermometer appeared. Among those who failed in their attempts to devise a heat-and-cold measurer were the noted Italian and the great Sir Isaac Newton.

These scientists endeavored to supply the need of instruments by means of tubes containing oil, spirits of wine, etc., but to no avail. It was reserved to one Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit, an obscure and poor man living at Danzig, to give the world the thermometer.

Fahrenheit began as a merchant and, possessing a taste for chemistry and mechanics, turned his attention to the problem of the thermometer. During his first series of experiments he used alcohol, but he soon became convinced that mercury was a more suitable substance to use in the tube.

It was about 1724, at Amsterdam, that Fahrenheit turned out the mercury thermometer that has served as a model ever since.

From the beginning Fahrenheit's plan was to indicate on the tube the two points at which water is congelated and boiled, respectively, and to graduate the space between. His first was an arbitrary marking beginning at thirty-two degrees, since he had found that the mercury descended thirty-two degrees more before coming to what he deemed the extreme cold resulting from a mixture of ice, water, and sal ammoniac.

It was not long before the Celsius of Sweden suggested the more scientific graduation of the hundred degrees between freezing and boiling points. This method has resulted in the centigrade thermometer. Another investigator, one Reaumur, came forward with another scheme of graduation of eighty degrees between the freezing and boiling points, on which the freezing and boiling points are marked 32 and 212 degrees, respectively, hold its own throughout a great part of the world.

RAILWAY MILEAGE OF CANADA

CANADA'S present railway mileage is more than sufficient to belt the globe with a single-track line, and leave 136 miles to double-track a part of it; says a Canadian contemporary.

In 1837, when Queen Victoria ascended the throne, we had 10 miles of railway, and we were content with this until 1847, when our total reached 100 miles. At Confederation, '87, we had 3,278 miles; in 1885, when the North-West Rebellion took place we had 10,773 miles. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier took office in 1896, there were 16,270 miles. In 1909 the mileage in operation was 24,104 miles, and the Grand Trunk Pacific had 945 miles of track laid, making a total of 25,049 miles. In addition, there are 1,464 miles of second track and 4,761 miles of yard tracks and sidings. When the Grand Trunk Pacific and the National Transcontinental Railways are put in operation our railway mileage will be increased by about 3,550 miles, of which 945 miles have been included in the total given. The total railway mileage, when the Transcontinental is completed, will be 28,599 miles, and this takes no account of the many other railroads which are now building lines in Canada.

Two Trains Collide-- No One Hurt

An exciting time was experienced in Frank for a short time on Monday morning, when the "flyer" going west ran into the yard engine here. The yard engine, which was under the control of Conductor Carruthers and engineer Moore had gone to the tank to get water and on returning it went to the west end to get on the switch. Before it reached the switch, the flyer, running a few minutes ahead of time, came around the corner from the slide and crashed into it. Both engines were badly battered, but nobody was hurt, except that the sudden stop gave the passengers a rather unexpected jar. Several couplings were broken, as well as dishes and other furnishings of the dining car. No doubt much more harm would have been done had it not been for the fact that the yard engine had no load on. The only explanation of the accident was that the engineers could not see the other engine coming in toward them, on account of the steam rising in the frosty air. The flyer had to wait here till engine No 886 was brought in from Crow's Nest.
